Central Traffic Agreement to Go Into Effect on Friday.

Chairman Donald Anxious to Reach an Understanding with Western Lines -East-Bound Shipments.

The Central Traffic Association lines having, during the last week, in New York, completed all their traffic arrangements for a division of east-bound passenger traffic, have set Friday of this week for the day when the divisions shall formally go into effect. Everything has been arranged as far as possible, and from present indications there are no reasons why the thing should not work satisfactorily. Vice Chairman Donald, of the Central Traffic Association, has requested Chairman Caldwell to call a joint meeting of the Western Passenger Association and Central Traffic Association lines, to see if a joint agreement cannot be arranged. No answer has yet been received from Chairman Caldwell, who will probably take up the matter with his own roads before he agrees to any joint meet-

The Right to Break Bulk.

A recent number of the Railroad Gazette contained an article on the question of breaking bulk, which rather reflected on the management of the Lake Erie & Western, the subject being the late litigation between the Big Four and the Lake Erie & Western. In the Railroad Gazette of April 28 appears an article from George Bradbury. general manager of the Lake Erie & Western, in which he gives his company's side of the case as follows: "Referring to your article in issue of 13th inst., headed "The Right to Break Bulk,' I think your conclusions wrong because your premises are wrong, probably in error. The Muncie Pulp Company is situated at a station called Industry, located about one and one-half miles south of Muncie, and is directly in the line of our Fort Wayne, Cincinnati, & Louisville branch. The Pulp company obtains it wood from Cairo, Ill., and from Pennsylvania, and the rate from either point to Muncie is the same either via Big Four or the Lake Erie. Until recently we had percentage agreements with the Big Four to and from Industry, which were canceled by the Big Four company, that canceled by the Big Four company; that company then, by inducements to the Pulp company, had their wood shipments consigned via the Big Four, who, in turn, tendered us the cars for delivery to the Pulp company for a switching charge of $2 per car. We declined to receive them, and then the Big Four company the said then the Big Four company, through their attorneys, had the Pulp company bring mandatory proceedings, which were granted ex parte, and upon hearing dissolved. The Lake Erie has never refused to handle cars without breaking bulk to and from the pulp and other industries. It is a simble question of compensation or division of ple question of compensation or division of the rates between this company and the Big Four. The Pulp company is not and cannot be injured in either event; their

March Accidents.

The Railroad Gazette of April 28 gives a record of accidents on railways of the United States in the month of March. The statement shows that there were 112 accidents, in which twenty-two persons were killed and eighty six injured. For the fourth consecutive month the record of accidents has been lighter than in any months of five years past. Only twentytwo persons were killed, and of these five were passengers, and there is no record of a passenger being killed in either February or March, which is remarkable. In commenting on this exception from accidents the Gazette says editorially: "In general it is safe to say that with fewer trains the chance of accident is less, but whether the chances decrease as rapidly as would apages between accidents and earnings would be difficult to determine. No doubt the dullness, leading to the discharge of many hundreds of men, has resulted in a decided improvement of the average of ability of the force on many railroads; and, besides this, the diminution of the distractions caused by overwork, extra trains, breaking in new men and other usual conditions must tend appreciably to reduce the number of blunders, whatever the qualifications of the

These bridges are to be built at three points along the railroad line known as "The Twins," "Golden Hollow" and "bridge No. 4." The receivers are also authorized to enter into an agreement with the Baldwin Locomotive Company for the payment of the six loco-motives now in their hands. They are to issue thirty-six promissory notes of $1,955.20 each for such payment, and take up one note each month for the next three years.

SUED HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW.

$10,000 Damage Suit Comes to the Federal Court from Benton County. A civil action for $10,000 damages came into the federal court from the Benton Circuit Court, yesterday, on petition of the defendant, Mrs. Ellen S. Terry, who is sued for that amount by her son-in-law for the alleged alienation of his wife's affections. Daniel McMichaels is the plaintiff, and he charges that he and his wife, Fanny Mc-Michaels, and child were happy and contented until his mother-in-law, Mrs. Terry, induced his wife to leave him and apply for a divorce. He says she used to have her daughter go to Chicago for frequent visits, and prejudiced her to such an extent against him that what had been a hand marriage became a dismal failure happy marriage became a dismal failure. He claims he was refused permission to see his child, and, altogether, is damaged $10,000 worth.

Mrs. Terry, in her answer, denies all the allegations the complainant makes, except the one about her daughter visiting her at Chicago. She says that McMichaels did not provide for his wife and child, who, as far as she knows, he never asked to see. The husband, she charges, lived in idleness and vice, and made no effort to support his family. She claims she furnished the money for their support.

TRAP FOR ARMSTRONG. "I went to the office the next morning at 8 o'clock, and Stannard came into the room, and when he saw me he went back to the door and called Armstrong. We went into the private office. I placed the chairs in position near the north end of the partition and told them to talk loud as I was a little hard of hearing. Stannard spoke up and said that Armstrong was one of the boys, and that he and Stannard had been in this kind of business a number of times before. He said I could bet my bottom dollar on Armstrong every 'I then said to Armstrong: 'You have heard the evidence of the government, and I think I can make a defense so that it will not be much against your con-science to do this. Stannard spoke up and said: Damn the conscience; Armstrong hasn't any.' Armstrong answered that he had lost his conscience several years ago. Armstrong said Stannard had told him of our conversations, and I asked him if I could depend upon him to carry out any arrangement between Stannard and I, and he said he would do anything Stannard agreed to. Then I spoke of the third person, and Stannard said Mr. Claypool satisfied him. I said I would call Mr. pool satisfied him. I said I would call Mr. Claypool, and Armstrong said he had better not be present during the conversation with Mr. Claypool, and got up to leave. I stepped to the door and called Mr. Claypool, and told him of the arrangement. He repeated it to Stannard and asked if that was right, and Stannard said it was. Stannard asked when he could see the money, and I told him I had to depend upon my friends for all the money pend upon my friends for all the money I got and it might be a little while before I could get it, and he had better not call till the next evening. I then went to the office of Miller & Winter and the case was fald before Judge Baker." Mr. Kern then took the notes of the stenographer and read from it some of the sentences it contained.

It was then admitted without proof that Armstrong was a member of the jury in the bank case, and that he had been instructed by Judge Baker not to converse with any person nor allow any person to converse with him about the case.

The government then announced that its case was completed. The only witnesses introduced by the defense were character witnesses. Capt. John Beatty, a farmer residing at Owensburg, Greene county, was the first witness called. He testified that he had known Armstrong for years, and he had known Armstrong for years, and that his reputation for honesty was good. He said since the failure of Armstrong his honesty had been spoken of by a number of people in the vicinity.

George McDaniels, a real-estate agent at Bedford, testified to Armstrong's good reputation for honesty. He had known Armstrong for ten or fifteen years. His reputation had been the subject of discussion be-cause he was in politics. He was township trustee in the township where he resided. Col. A. C. Vorhis, a banker at Bedford, testified to his good character. He said Arm-strong had borrowed money from him pri-vately and as a banker. He kept both his personal account and trust account at witness's bank. J. E. Boruff, an attorney at Bedford, was also a witness as to character. He said he had been attorney for Armstrong in suits to set aside some conveyances made at the time of his failure. The conveyances attacked were one to his wife and one to Stannard Bros., and both were sustained by the court. Homer Furguson, Alex. Evans and James Louder also testified to Armstrong's good character. The court then adjourned till 2 o'clock.

A MOTION TO QUASH. A Step the Defense May Take in Regard to Counts.

There has been some curiosity among those interested in the case against the Coffins and Reed as to the course to be pursued by the defense this afternoon when the case is begun again. The dismissal of the jury on account of the attempted corruption throws the matter back to its original status. The defense, it is said, may file a motion to quash on one or more of the indictments. This course was not taken before, and in a dispute that came up over the admissibility of a certain line of evidence Judge Baker told the defense that its proper course would have been to file a motion to quash instead of attacking the testimony on the line it was following. The government will have to reintroduce all the evidence of teller Robinson and the others and the defense will have the privilege of cross-questioning the witnesses after having a week or so in which to consider the evidence the government depends upon. The government will not ask Mr.

Haughey to testify, and it is not seen how he could be compelled to give evidence. He could, if he chose, refuse to testify on the grounds that what he would give might incriminate him on the counts of the indictment not nolle prossed.
